

Extract from:

Daniel Debomy, "Do the Europeans still believe in the EU? Analysis of attitudes and expectations of EU public opinions over the past quarter century", Study No. 91, Notre Europe, June 2012.

Table of Contents

---

Introduction	p. 1
1. From Eurofavour to Eurogloom: the evolution of membership and benefits indicators	p. 3
1.1. The recent climate of opinion according to two basic indicators: lameness of pro-European attitudes in general	p. 3
1.2. The current situation compared with evolutions over the past quarter century: just another moment of Eurogloom or the start of heightened deterioration?	p. 5
1.3. The climate of opinion in the different Member States: significant disparities, in both the old and the new	p. 8
1.3.1. Disparities in the old Member States	p. 8
1.3.2. Disparities in the new Member States	p. 9
1.4. The evolution of opinion indicators in the different Member States: similarities and differences	p. 11
1.4.1. Spring 1985-Spring 1991: universal improvement	p. 11
1.4.2. Spring 1991-Spring 1997: a more or less strong decline	p. 12
1.4.3. Spring 1997-Autumn 2007: less similar evolutions	p. 13
1.4.4. Since 2008: an overall decrease	p. 15
1.4.5. The trend observed over the entire past quarter century	p. 17
2. The widely understood need for a strong and closely-knit Europe, despite fluctuations in perceptions of the Union	p. 19
2.1. The imperative necessity for European unification	p. 19
2.2. Broad and staunch support for Delors' proposal to relaunch Europe	p. 20
2.3. Strong expectations despite the beginning of dissatisfaction at the time of the Maastricht Treaty	p. 21
2.4. Increasing reticence in the 1990s	p. 22
2.5. 2001: The climate of attitudes in the EU15 and in candidate countries	p. 23
2.5.1. In the Member States	p. 23
2.5.2. In the candidate countries	p. 25
2.6. The divide between Eurofavour and Euroscepticism: some noticeable changes at the beginning of the 2000s	p. 27

2.7. Before the crisis, a certain improvement in public feelings toward the EU	p. 29
2.8. Continued high expectations of the EU, but also worrying cracks	p. 29
3. A necessary Europe that does not boil down to a Europe of necessity	p. 31
3.1. Historic bonds and a common heritage	p. 31
3.2. Europe, a historic and cultural community:
a clear concept in most Member States	p. 32
3.2.1. Widespread European empathy	p. 33
3.2.2. More distant attitudes in a few countries	p. 33
3.2.3. Differences that can be explained from a historical point of view	p. 34
3.3. A core set of shared values that make Europe unique	p. 35
4. The call for a European Union with a broad scope of action in a context of growing concern linked to the abuses of economic liberalism	p. 39
4.1. A long standing fact	p. 39
4.2. An observation that remains in the enlarged EU	p. 40
4.3. Expectations regarding European action seemed to remain more or less constant, whereas concerns were growing among citizens of several countries.	p. 41
4.3.1. Widespread confidence 25 years ago	p. 41
4.3.2. The appearance of a number of uncertainties	p. 42
4.3.3. Deepening gloom...	p. 43
4.3.4. ... extending into so far preserved countries	p. 46
4.3.5. In the last years, strong similar concerns everywhere in the EU	p. 48
4.4. Fears of a liberal economy going wrong	p. 48
5. Factors of disillusionment linked to national collective mentalities	p. 51
5.1. Founding Member States	p. 51
5.2. Member States that joined the Union in the 1970s	p. 53
5.3. Member States that joined the Union in the 1980s	p. 54
5.4. Member States that joined the Union in the 1990s	p. 56
5.5. Member States that joined the Union in 2004	p. 57
5.6. Member States that joined the Union in 2007	p. 60
Conclusion	p. 61
Selected related publications by Notre Europe	p. 63